

FLAWED U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

After 9/11 , when America waged a war against terrorism worldwide and started pounding Afghanistan with its deep bunker buster bombs , before moving in their land forces, to completely eliminate the Taliban and Al . Qaida operatives and in pursuit of their prized catch Osama bin Ladan, they committed two grave and unforgivable mistakes , for which they are paying till date .

Firstly, it was uncalled . for that to fight terrorism America took the help of an undeclared terrorist State of Pakistan, which had already earned the dubious distinction of being the fountain- head of international terrorism and specially when Pakistan army's ISI wing under Gen. Musharraf was hand-in-glove with the Taliban, which was fighting the Nato forces in Afghanistan.

America's second greatest blunder was its military adventurism into Iraq. Keeping the global terrorism issue on the back-burner. George Bush ignoring U.N.Chief weapons inspectors' advise waged a war on Iraq , on the pretext of being in possession of nuclear weapons, which were not to be found, because Iraq did not possess any. All the years waisted in Iraq, gave enough time to the Taliban to regroup and rearm themselves.

As of now, the entire focus of the American and Nato forces, should be on Afghanistan and Pakistan , both forming the epicenter of global terrorism , with the added risk of Pakistan's nuclear weapons falling in the hands of the terrorists .They all should double up the strenght of their armed forces and their fire power in Afghanistan and prepare for a concerted thrust for the finale .
